

Innovation

Originality? What defines innovation?

Doing something that has no precedent....Doing something that has never been done before.... like Dick Fosbury, who conceptualized a completely new way of jumping higher off the ground that has revolutionized the high jump ever since.

Or....

Creating a new indirect light that was the first to utilize a specular diffuser that threw light out to allow indirect fixtures to be employed in spaces with normal ceiling heights to eliminate veiling reflections from computer screens....

Devising a unique honeycomb space plan that allowed programmers to collaborate side-by-side, while achieving exceptional efficiency and supporting small and large group teams.....

Making a reception desk out of recycled yogurt cups....Using recycled aluminum as a textural magnet to draw people to interaction spaces.....

Using a recycled slate-resin face sheet as an exterior skin material for an inner city learning center because it was "green" and graffiti-proof....

Turning a garage door lightweight steel panel into an exterior skin system that passed the Underwriters Laboratories certification process and enabled a new award-winning corporate headquarters complex to be completed under budget and then fully depreciated as a research expense....

Bringing theatrical excitement to grocery shopping with color-corrected high-efficiency lighting, eye-catching graphics and strong colors to differentiate quality-conscious Heinen's from ordinary distribution-oriented Big Box retailers....

We have had the pleasure of many opportunities to raise the bar in our own fields. In today's climate, the challenges are many and they are significant.

Can you clear the bar with the level of thinking around your table?

"We have had the pleasure of working with Bill Eberhard and his firm both as a customer and as a supplier on multiple projects. Their design excellence and creativity has been the signature of all of these experiences. As a customer, Bill and his team took a late 1880's building and transformed it in to a state of the art showroom that has lead to a significant increase in sales. As a supplier, they have always pushed outside the envelope to successfully create new unique solutions and product applications."
